

Diversify the way you learn of languages

How to develop opportunities for language learning

Language learning is a process in which diversity plays a major role. You can use languages in class (formal), within scholar projects (informal) or during your free time. The more opportunities you get to learn and use languages, the more you can acquire languages.

1. Please think about all the opportunities you have to use the languages you learn and fill in the following diagram. You will find an example below.
2. What could you do to extend your personal learning environment? Please discuss this with your teachers.
3. Look at the three red arrows. Where do you want to start?

This is an output of the project “Learning environments where modern languages flourish” (2016-2019) of the European Centre for Modern Languages (ECML). The ECML is a Council of Europe institution promoting excellence in language education in its member states.
